Teacher Effectiveness Series

The workshop series has been designed to support and develop teacher's effectiveness within the classroom.

Workshop Outline

One of the misconceptions that often occur around inquiry learning is that the students design big questions and then go to work on answering those questions.

What teachers have discovered is that students spend large amounts of time researching but rarely produce worthwhile results.

- This workshop demonstrates practically how to deliver authentic, results-producing, inquiry-based learning units that develop understanding and skills.
- Teachers will develop a unit using backward planning which also allows for differentiation and skill development.
- NOTE: This workshop can also be targeted to specialisations – Science and Maths, Humanities and English, Applied Learning (e.g. VCAL in Victoria), etc.

About Dr Adrian Bertolini

Dr Adrian Bertolini is one of Australia's foremost thought leaders on practical and real education that empowers and develops resilient, independent learners. Whilst his journey began as an engineer and Senior Lecturer in Aerospace Engineering at RMIT University, Adrian has worked across Australia, with students and teachers in primary, secondary and tertiary environments, to create authentic learning structures and experiences.

Adrian is much sought after by schools and businesses for his simple and effective presentations that not only challenges people to think deeply but also provides listeners with the practical "how's" to move forward. He is constantly acknowledged for being an engaging, passionate and knowledgeable speaker and facilitator.
